How it works:

Each player starts the first round by throwing 101 darts and counting up their score. We have special score boards that make that easy. Each player picks a partner to throw on a board with, but they are not actually competing against, or with that person. Each person's score is verified by the board partner or chalker and turned in. The scores from all participants are ranked highest to lowest. The top half of the field advances and the bottom half is eliminated.

The second round: The players with the top two scores play on a board together, the third and fourth, fifth and sixth, and so on. This means that players are on a board with someone of similar ability. Again, each player throws 101 darts and counts up their score. The top half of the field advances. This process continues until a winner is determined.
